Stories are medicine.

Clarissa Pinkola Estes

When you stand and share your story in an empowering way, your story will heal you and your story will heal somebody else.

SHARING

our stories, our selves, our success

anthologies of men's and women's empowerment stories

We all have a story. Everyone in this life has faced adversity and challenge, to one degree or another. It is only when we face our challenges, with an underlying faith that we will come through them stronger and more aligned with our authentic selves than ever before, that we give ourselves permission to shine.

Lisa Browning, Publisher

Participation Details (Volume 7)

Stories must be true, and personal, and written in first person. Suggested word count is between 2,500 and 3,000. Other than that, there are no specific guidelines on content, other than the fact that stories should leave the reader feeling hopeful, and a little less alone.

There is a $50 fee to participate. This includes editing of your story, and allows each writer to purchase copies of the book at cost (approximately $5), sell them at the retail price of $20, and retain all proceeds. It is our hope that each writer will consider donating a portion of those proceeds to the charity or charities of their choice. Deadline for submissions is Saturday, January 2, 2021.

Important Note: We do not want to exclude anyone because they are not able to pay this fee. However, all books will have to be purchased at the retail price of $20. Editing time will still be included.

Books will be promoted via a number of online and print media.

Each author's photo and bio will be included in the anthology, and posted on the Sharing Anthologies website (www.sharinganthologies.com). A PDF of the promotional poster, and individual author's bio sheets can be provided upon request (at no charge).
